Weekly Bulletin #175

If we are to resemble Christ we should expect to resemble Him in failure. Failure is not our punishment but our privilege. We are never nearer to Christ than when we are beaten by the weight of life. It is when we are flattened and helpless that we can trust not in our power any more but in the power of God. When I am weak, then am I strong - - because at last I can draw upon the source or strength which is God. God expresses Himself in the helplessness of man: it is the Father's prerogative to come to the rescue of His children. If failure had no other value than that of making us childlike, it would justify itself, but in fact its good effects can be seen in every aspect of the spiritual life. It teaches humility, compassion, and the need for perseverance, hope, faith, and a spirit of penance. Failure opens the door to the graces which follow upon the nights of the soul. The nights of the soul are, in fact, little else than an awareness of failure. It is only when we have failed, uniting our frustrations with Christ's frustrations, that we come to see the overall pattern of the gospel. The Sermon of the Mount is at last felt to be the only possible answer to the problems of man
