November 18, 1990

Have you ever noticed how the holiest people you have come across always seem to be the happiest? You would think that enclosed nuns "Locked" in the their convents, and contemplative monks hidden away in the secluded monasteries, with no possession and no pleasures such as movies and parties and radios and television, fine foods and expensive drinks, might be lonely and sad and depressed?? NOT AT ALL; they are just the ones that seem to be always laughing whenever you visit them. Their faces radiate joy and peace. Then on the other side of it you would think that men and women who have lots of money and lovely houses and fine cars and all things would be proclaiming their happiness all day long?? One would think this! But it does not work out like this. The lonely ones are men and women who have every material possession thinkable and every pleasure available. It is a known fact that the people who suffer most from depression and who eventually commit suicide are mostly the rich and the worldly, not the poor and those who live in houses of religion.
