A man who wishes to build up within himself the edifice of sanctity so that it will withstand the impetuous fury of the passions must set his edifice upon a firm and secure foundation, and to do this he must dig down until he comes to the solid rock, and there lay the first stone. This rock is self-knowledge, which will lead him to pass judgement on himself, to put himself in his proper place, and to be humble.

Pride, which is the opposite of humility, is an exaggerated opinion of one's own excellence. Pride causes one to place his exaggerated opinion before the opinion (or needs) of those who live around him. Pride is selfish! Pride raises one in his own estimation above his proper state and condition; it is a false judgement which distorts - tarnishes - his duty to God and his relations to his fellow creatures, introducing everywhere confusion and disorder. It is very difficult to live with a proud man!
