

POPE PIUS XII on PATRIOTISM:

Today you sometimes meet citizens who are almost afraid to show any particular devotion to their country. As if a love of your own land has to mean a contempt for all other lands; as if the natural desire to see your own country beautiful, internally prosperous, and esteemed and respected by others, must inevitably lead to a hostility toward other peoples! There are even some people who are trying to get away from using the word "FATHERLAND" and attempting to substitute other terms that are, they believe, more adapted to our times.

Surely, beloved sons, We must say that this diminished love for the fatherland - - the largest family given to us by God - - is one more sign, and not the least important, of a loss of direction on the part of modern men.
